I found myself falling in love with the people in this book. I was reminded of the mediaeval "scholares vagantes" (wandering scholars), with Peggy like a modern day tour guide whose itinerary was to have us travel from place to place, teacher to teacher, seeking wisdoms.

David Epston, MSW, Co-founder, Narrative Therapy; from the Foreword.

Peggy Sax's book inspired my imagination to look at my "growing edge" as a teacher-practitioner, inviting me to review the principles and beliefs I hold dear and to reflect on the congruence between the cherished values of Narrative Therapy and the values and purposes expressed in the teaching relationship.

Marta Campillo, MA, Director of Centro de Atención Psicológica a la Familia AC, Xalapa, Veracruz, México

I was engaged from the first page in reflecting on extending my own teaching practices. I am left with all this lovely space to play with the ideas Peggy and her students have so generously offered.

Aileen Cheshire, M.Couns., Counselling Co-ordinator, Bachelor of Social Practice, Unitec, Auckland, New Zealand

This is a breakthrough book. It offers teachers and students in human service work a way to transcend classroom walls (and mindsets) by adding the fifth dimension of the Internet. Any teacher or student of relationship therapy will be inspired by the many examples of 'learning on a cloud' that Sax puts into her (cyber) spacecraft of a delicious, lively book.

Lynn Hoffman, LICSW, Author, Exchanging Voices: A Collaborative Approach to Family Therapy; Family Therapy: An Intimate Journey

Without being taught in any didactic or pedantic way, you cannot help but find yourself responding, reflecting and learning. In her hands, teaching and learning merge and learners become authorities on their own learning experience. Peggy Sax provides a model to aspire to of how online learning platforms can be used to enrich learning. I know of no better account of how to teach and to learn therapeutic practice in the era of online learning.
